Elizabeth I (detail), c.1600

Elizabeth I by unknown English artist

Our Tudor portraits depict some of the most memorable figures in British history. This painting shows the Queen in her Coronation robes, holding the orb and sceptre of state. Tree-ring dating suggests it was made decades after her 1559 Coronation, and may have marked an anniversary.

Floor 3, Room 1

William Shakespeare, associated with John Taylor
Our 17th century collection depicts many people who defined their times, such as the most celebrated English playwright and poet, William Shakespeare. This portrait was the Gallery's first acquisition, in 1856. It's the definitive portrait of the Bard; with a good claim to have been painted from life, and a source for many depictions since.

Floor 3, Room 3

William Shakespeare (detail), associated with John Taylor, c.1610

Mai (Omai) (detail) by Sir Joshua Reynolds, c.1776

Portrait of Mai by Sir Joshua Reynolds

Our 18th century paintings offer a window into British history and its most fascinating characters, pre-photography. This is one of Sir Joshua Reynolds' most acclaimed portraits, of Mai (Omai) – a Polynesian who came to the UK with Captain James Cook and was painted during his unprecedented visit.

Floor 3, Room 18

Mary Seacole by Albert Challen
Our portraits from the Victorian era - when photography revolutionised portraiture - feature people whose lives were shaped by rapid change. Mary Seacole, a nurse born in Jamaica, won medals in the Crimean war, and went on to become a self-made businesswoman and pioneer of her age.

Floor 2, Room 21

Lucian Freud (detail) by Lucian Freud, 1963 © The Lucian Freud Archive / Bridgeman Images

Lucian Freud by Lucian Freud

Our 20th century collection features artists who expanded the possibilities of portraiture. This self-portrait is in the broadly painted, expressive style which came to define Lucian Freud's work. While Freud's gaze is direct, his features are abstracted; suggested in painterly swathes of flesh colour.

Floor 2, Room 26

Malala Yousafzai by Shirin Neshat
Our contemporary galleries highlight people who are making an impact today. This photograph of the human rights activist Malala Yousafzai is by Iranian-born artist Shirin Neshat, and is hand-inscribed with a poem by the Pashto poet Rahmat Shah Sayel from Peshawar.
